Also, I have Windows DVD Maker, but no DVD burner. What should I buy? I created a movie in Movie Maker. I bought some DVD + r's - the correct burn the movie on? Also, I don't have a burner, I thought that I did, I can only burn a CD what should I buy? I don't have a Windows DVD authoring program. Hi rondah, Welcome to the Microsoft community newsgroups. The type of recordable DVD, you need to use depends on your DVD burner, as well as on your DVD player. Some DVD burners can burn only to certain types of DVD recordable. For example, with some DVD burners, you can only record to DVD + R discs or DVD + RW or DVD-R or DVD - RW discs, while some other DVD burners will let you burn on all of these recordable DVD types. As long as your DVD burner supports burning to these types of discs, you can use Windows DVD creation to burn a DVD using one of the following types of recordable and re-recordable DVD media: DVD + R, DVD + RW, DVD - R, DVD - RW, and DVD - ROM. These recordable or rewritable DVDs can be either simple single laminate or single sided double layer. You should also consider the device you're using to play the DVD once you have engraved, if possible. Some DVD players and DVD - ROM drives play only certain types of DVD. To determine what types of DVDs your DVD player or DVD - ROM drive can play, see the documentation that came with your device or go to the manufacturer's Web site. I'm planning to upgrade the memory to 4 GB. Mine uses + (2x1GB) DDR2 - 667 Mhz + and I saw only 2 modules of 2 GB DDR2 - 667 Mhz + cost the same as + 2x2gb DDR2-800 +. I benefit in any way from this upgrade? Can I damage my laptop? I heard that my laptop will work anyway to 667 MHz, but I'd like to know your opinion about it before I buy it. Thanks in advance! Hello You can buy both types of module. The point is that the fastest modules (DDR2-800) downgrade always compatible system at low speed. This would mean that the modules will run at 667 MHz. So you n t destroy your laptop, it's just a feature. Everything will work correctly. As far as I know your laptop runs at 667 MHz can accelerate. What types of memory sd micro HP Split x 2 is not compatible with? Hello I got a Split of HP 13 x 2 PC. I noticed that there is a micro sd under the shelf of the screen. I want to install a permanent big micro sd so I can still work with huge files so I don't have to worry about the 500 GB hard drive that is installed on the side of the keyboard. I want to get a micro SDHC or a micro SDXC which are the memories that support 64/128 GB capacity. However, I have read on various posts that the Tablet does not recognize these memory cards or it is not compatible with them which could end up with random crashes on the PC. I am very uncertain as to what I should allow me the manual of HP does not exactly specify the maximum capacity, it reads and what technology does work with .( Once again, in my case, I am interested in HC or XC cards) Can you please advice? Thank you Hello Nicoman, TwoPointOh provided solid advice; In addition, I suggest that you select the media designated as "Class 10" which is the best speed rating currently available; who will ensure that your micro-SD card will still be usable for a long time. Currently, micro-SD 32 GB and 64 GB cards offer the most favourable cost-per-GB; You can be sure to get a compatible product if you buy your micro-SD card accessories | HP® official store. Enjoy! What type of memory card? I'll buy a memory card for my Z3. Do I need a SDHC or SDXC? @Nc25 The two are compatible, SDXC are just bigger. Z3 should support up to 128 GB of maps. Source: white book Xperia Z3 DV9000 how to check what type of memory, it will be compatible with? My laptop is a HP Pavilion dv9000. That's what he said right next to the microphone.
